

Tiempo para el sol! Jurawatt Desert Modules are on their way to Colombia!

Colombia is a country with a hot and sunny climate. In fact, the daily average radiation is 4.5 kWh/m². It's an ideal environment for the operation of Jurawatt Desert Modules, which will soon be demonstrating their excellent performance in Colombia's diverse climate conditions. In mid-April, 360 of the JWO60 modules were dispatched to Baranquilla, location of the headquarters of a young company called MH Energia Solar S.A.S, our exclusive distributor for Colombia.

The outlook for solar power is positive: "Our country still uses a lot of coal, hydropower and fossil fuels. But the government wants to promote alternative energies to reduce this dependence and introduce a broader energy mix," explained Juan Manuel Mora Delgado, General Manager of MH Energia Solar. And the government had good reasons for this plan because Colombia has been hit hard by climate change and could be affected by droughts in the future.

Juan Manuel Mora and Patrick Thoma, CEO of Jurawatt GmbH, closed the deal in February. Both are convinced that the Desert Modules' technology is perfect for Colombia.

Colombia is the second most highly populated country in South America after Brazil with around 45 million citizens. Approximately four percent of the population lives in areas that aren't connected to the grid, so solar power is the ideal solution for them.

Desert Modules are extremely robust and durable (three times longer life span). They are designed to operate in permanent temperatures of up to 145 °C and are completely PID-free. They can also be completely recycled.
